Online

Methods of instruction include video of live classes, PowerPoint presentations, text instruction, and independent tasks such as research projects and papers. Some courses include hyperlinked projects such as preaching videos, historical journals, biblical studies, and geographical mapping. Each class includes interaction through chat rooms, forums, threads, email, and video conferencing. Sample courses can be viewed by guests and students at www.midamericaondemand.org

Students may enroll in courses for credit or as non-credit auditors. Students taking classes through the distance education program must meet all academic requirements that apply to resident students. Up to and including 49% of graduation requirements may be earned through online offerings.

Students must complete the regular admissions process. In addition to the online tuition rate, a $110 technology fee per semester is charged for students who take only online courses. Courses follow the regular school academic calendar.
