

ABOUT

The Journal of Mid-America Baptist Theological Seminary is designed to explore current, conservative evangelical thought related to vital issues of Christian belief and practice. While the writers come from a wide-range of backgrounds, each has a solid biblical approach to their studies. MABTS does not necessarily endorse every statement by every writer, but believe you will find helpful and provocative thought in each article.

The Journal is now available online for the first time. The online site (www.midamericajournal.org) offers the entire journal free of charge. The online edition includes an interactive forum, a bookstore, and other special features. A print edition will be published each spring and mailed to subscribers, academic institutions, and ministry organizations. You may subscribe through the online site or by sending $10 with your mailing instructions to Editor, The Journal, MABTS, 2095 Appling Rd., Cordova, Tennessee 38016.

Located in Cordova (Memphis), Tennessee, and Schenectady, New York, MABTS attempts to guide students into a thorough understanding of the Bible and its relevance for today, preparing those who have been called of God to preach and teach the Word of God. Students balance their academic pursuits with the Practical Missions program in which each student shares the Gospel of Jesus with someone every week and participates in ministry activities each week.

MABTS desires to glorify Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior. This purpose is achieved by:

- Teaching the Bible as the verbally-inspired Word of God, wholly without error as originally given by God, and sufficient as our infallible rule of faith and practice;
- Maintaining high academic standards and promoting reverent scholarship;
- Teaching that people should be faithful in the Lord's service through the local church;
- Demonstrating the fruit of the Spirit as His gifts are exercised; and
- Training people to do evangelism at home and cross-culturally.
